Attention is called to the fact that inconsistencies have occasionally occurred in the data given the writer for the census. Much effort has been made to correct them but it is not expected that all have been rectified.

In the collection of facts for the history much difficulty has been experienced in obtaining information of a definite nature concerning the early settlers, but what has come to the hand of the writer has been used in this pamphlet with the hope it may be of some convenience and interest to the readers.

Acknowledgement is hereby made of the many helpful suggestions and necessary facts freely given by the citizens of the town. The writer in preparing these pages has not aimed at completeness—rather to brevity, and hopes that the concise statements of the facts contained herein may be of use as a reference manual.

LOCATION.

The town of Kingfield is located in the County of Franklin, State of Maine. It is bounded on the north by the plantation of Jerusalem, on the east by the town of Lexington, on the south by New Portland and Freeman and on the west by Salem and Abraham Township. The east line and a part of the south line of Kingfield is the county line between Franklin and Somerset.

The 45th parallel of north latitude passes through the upper half of the town of Kingfield, the village of Kingfield being about three minutes south of it. The middle point of Kingfield is about 9 minutes west of the 70th meridian of longitude east of Greenwich.

HISTORICAL.

NATURAL FEATURES.

The natural features of Kingfield are varied and extensive. The town occupies an area of a little more than 36 square miles and for the most part consists of upland territory. It is in some parts mountainous. The valley of the Carrabassett and a tract of intervale land extending through the "West part of the town" furnish excellent farming district. However, the town of Kingfield is not an agricultural town, tending more toward lumbering and lumber manufacturing. Situated near Mt. Abraham and near other mountains of this region, its scenery is picturesque. Few towns in Maine can boast a more varied and interesting surface than Kingfield.

There are numerous ponds and streams which furnish excellent fishing grounds, Tufts Pond being the most frequented at the present time.

The water power of Kingfield is of sufficient proportions to supply the present needs and can be developed to still greater proportions.

The Carrabassett river passing through Kingfield village crosses the eastern part of the town in a nearly north and south course and furnishes several good opportunities within Kingfield's bounds to establish small plants and thereby build up the industrial progress of the town. There are in Kingfield, at present, several plants run by water-power and conducting a good business in lumber manufacturing. The names of individuals and the lines they are in being found elsewhere in this pamphlet.

The past twenty years have done much to develop the natural facilities of Kingfield, and today we see the town transformed from a little hamlet under the brow of the mountains, and scarcely known to the outside world, to a bustling, enterprising town with modern equipments and every advantage known to towns of many times her size. Ardent hopes are entertained for a continuance of this growth, founded on the natural features of which we have been speaking. Today her hills and mountains are thickly studded with white birch, poplar, spruce, etc., and though this timber is being converted into long and short lumber and novelty work, it is believed that the supply is sufficient for all future needs, thus assuring the steady growth of one of Franklin's most prosperous towns.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The town of Kingfield was originally a part of the "Bingham Purchase." It was also a part of the "Million Acres," the ownership of which was assumed by William King and Thomas Otis. King finally bought out Otis and assumed control of the whole territory. As is well known the enterprise was disastrous for King and it was one of the chief causes of the financial ruin which overtook him in his later years. It is said that the disgrace which these reverses brought upon him caused his insanity. While the enterprise resulted very disastrously for Gov. King, it was a great help to Kingfield. He was a thorough business man and employed improved methods in his business. His "Million Acre Farm," as the towns of Lexington, Concord and Kingfield were called, was carried on in a business way but conditions were such that he could not financially succeed.

He cleared land, built a dam across the Carrabassett on or near the site of the present one; built saw mills, corn mills, clover-seed mills, carding mills, felting and cloth-dressing mills, dyeing works, tanneries and leather dressing works and many other conveniences, all working to build up the town and make it a desirable place to settle in. Gen. King was a man of indomitable will. "He was the man whose energy and perseverance got the State of Maine incorporated." While a few settlers came into the territory of Kingfield voluntarily, many of them, in those early days, came in response to effort put forth by Gov. King, and were established on farms by him.

Effort has been made by the writer to obtain exact information in reference to the early settlers. It was hoped that dates could be given in this account but such information was largely unobtainable. It has been pretty well established that the first white men to locate here were two hunters. Their names were John M. Dutton and Nathaniel Kimbal. They came from Farmington to this region to hunt in the fall of 1805 and in the following spring concluded to settle here. So, in 1806 they brought their families and began the gigantic enterprise of transforming 36 sq. m. of wilderness into a town with the equipments demanded by civilized man. John M. Dutton was a prominent man for many years after the settlement became a plantation and even a town, being many times a town official. These two men in later years were drowned in the Carrabassett by a boat capsizing and going over the dam. No records are obtainable showing the names of the next two or three settlers but it is pretty well established that Nathaniel Dudley was one of the number.

Mr. Dudley was a man of many accomplishments and a business man of excellent ability. He was selling agent for Gov. King, having charge of the disposal of all products from the vast farms operated in this region.

His son, William King Dudley, was born in 1809, being the first white male child born in Kingfield. Another son, Edmund Dudley, was general superintendent of the King farm and managed the whole estate. The Voses came about the same time as the above named. They came from Mercer. Soon after four settlers came from the town of Greene. They were Stephen Larrabee, William Larrabee, John Stevens and Jacob Phillips. John Stevens was a prominent man in town for many years. Jacob Phillips' daughter, Martha, was the first white female child born in town. Joseph Tufts came into Kingfield not far from this time and settled on the hill near Tufts' Pond. The Blanchards came soon after from Weymouth, Mass. Not far from this time Solomon Stanley and the Pullens came from Winthrop. We are sorry to say that we are unable to give the dates exactly. The Dolbiers, Pillsburys and Mayhews came from Boston. The Nortons came from Martha's Vineyard. The Gilberts came from Kingston, Mass. The Kings and Porters came from Bath and vicinity. The Longleys came from Norridgewock. The Fosters, Trasks, Ushers and Websters came from New Hampshire. Among the early settlers are the following names in addition to the above: Savage, Reed, Judkins, Pike, Wyman, Drummond, Hinds, Curtis, Simmons, Randall, Lane, Batchelder, Lander, Thompson, Wood, Hathaway, Chaffin, Hammond, Barnes, Fillibrown, French and Brooks. After the "hard times" from 1812 to 1816 were over the growth of Kingfield was steady. Gradually the pioneer's hand transformed the wilderness into a bustling community. Succeeding years developed her natural facilities and gave us one of the substantial towns of Franklin County.

ORGANIZATION.

The earliest record of an organized government in the territory of the town of Kingfield, found in the town record bears the date of 1813. However, it is probable that this is not the date of the organization of the Plantation of Kingfield, the name by which this first government was known. Another name for it was Plantation No. 3 in the first range. On the fourth day of April 1814 was held the first regular plantation meeting of which we have a record. At this meeting votes were cast for Governor and Lieut. Governor of Massachusetts. In this election Kingfield gave Hon. Samuel Dexter 31 votes and Hon. Caleb Strong 7 votes. For Lieut. Governor she voted for William Phillips and Albion K. Paris, the former receiving 7 votes and the latter 31 votes.

This meeting was called by Nathaniel Dudley, John Stevens and William Larrabee, the board of assessors. For the year 1814-15 the assessors chosen were Joseph Knapp, John Stevens and Paul Wing. Lewis Mower was town clerk. Thomas Otis was collector of taxes. Thirty dollars was raised for town charges for the ensuing year.

The next year the assessors were John Dutton, Lewis Mower and Stephen Larrabee. During the latter part of this year concerted effort was made to form a town government and success came to reward their efforts in the month of January, 1816. The following is a copy of the Act of Incorporation passed by the General Court of Massachusetts and signed by the governor, Caleb Strong:—

"In the year of our Lord one thousand, eight hundred and sixteen. An act to establish the town of Kingfield in the county of Somerset:

MILITARY MATTERS.

Kingfield's part in military matters is one of which she can be justly proud. The town was founded by a military officer, and since her settlement there has been no military conflict of importance which has failed to bring forth soldiers from Kingfield, and their records have been an honor to the town. The Civil War called out the largest number, and nobly did they do their work. One incident mars the lustre of Kingfield's role in the Civil War and this is so largely because the real nature of the incident was not understood. Because of the general misunderstanding of the nature of the so-called "Kingfield Rebellion," we take this opportunity to give the official report of the Adjutant General of Maine upon the affair and we trust that it will help to correct the erroneous idea that Kingfield, as a town, was disloyal. The report follows:

"The only overt attempt to obstruct the enforcement of the conscription law in this State occurred in July 1863, in the towns of Kingfield, Freeman and Salem in the second district. In these towns the distribution of notifications to drafted men by the officers of enrolment, was resisted. In the former town officer Lambert of Phillips, when about to enter upon his duty, was met by a mob of nearly fifty persons and ordered to leave town, with threats of personal violence in case he refused. Appealing in vain to several of the influential citizens of the place to interfere and stay such riotous proceedings, and not deeming it prudent to remain, the mandate of the mob was obeyed. In the town of Freeman a mob visited the residence of Mr. Clark, the enrolling officer, the same night, and destroyed the notifications he had in his possession. In the town of Salem the same operation was repeated. Certain other riotous demonstrations took place a few days later in the town of Kingfield, indicating that unless such a spirit of opposition as was manifested was not put down, serious consequences would be the result. The attention of the United States authorities being called to these flagrant violations of law and order, an expedition was detailed and placed under the charge of Post Adjutant Webber of Assistant Provost Marshal General's staff, with orders to proceed to Kingfield and enforce the laws and restore the public peace. The expedition was composed of the Lewiston Light Infantry, Capt. J. T. Stevens, made up mostly of returned veterans of the 18th Regiment, numbering rank and file sixty-six men, called to this service by special order No. 13 of this department, of July 23, 1863, and a detail of twenty-one enlisted men from Augusta, under Lieut. James A. Godfrey, who joined the company at Lewiston. The whole command numbered eighty-seven rank and file, and was officered as follows: Capt. J. T. Stevens; 1st Lieutenant, James A. Godfrey; 2nd Lieutenant, N. Byron Reed. Private E. Sands acted as Quartermaster, and to captains Knowlton and Nye, privates A. O. Morgan, W. W. Ayer, and Dr. Martin were assigned the duty of serving the notifications. Four days' rations were provided and ten rounds of ball cartridges given each man.

On July 23d, in the afternoon, this force left Lewiston by the Androscoggin railroad for Farmington, where it encamped on the common for the night, while those selected to serve the notifications proceeded to New Portland. The next day morning the force proceeded to New Vineyard, thence to New Portland and thence to Kingfield. When within half a mile of the village, a delegation of citizens, accompanied by a band of music, came out and escorted the company to the village, in the vicinity of which it was stationed. In the mean time those who had been detailed to serve the notifications, had arrived and entered upon their work, Adjt. Webber and Dr. Martin serving the notices in Kingfield, Capt. Nye and Private Morgan in Salem, and Capt. Knowlton and Private Ayer in Freeman. During the afternoon of the following day these officers reported that they had successfully accomplished their mission. The object of the expedition having been accomplished, it commenced its return to Lewiston, arriving during the afternoon of the 26th.

I am happy to state that the loyal citizens on the route over which the expedition passed, were uniting in their attention to the troops, and proffered every assistance in their power. The soldiers behaved with the greatest propriety. Not a single instance of intoxication or disorderly conduct was reported. Adjutant Webler and Capt. Stevens are deserving of praise for their excellent discipline and the creditable manner in which they performed their duty.

The prompt and energetic action of the United States authorities in suppressing by an armed force the treasonable spirit that had begun to show itself, and which completely overawed the sentiment of loyalty, was the means of doing much good. While it strengthened the hands of the loyal portion of the community, it furnished a lesson to those who had taken a hostile attitude, by which they learned that such a course could not be tolerated or pursued with impunity."

RECENT DEVELOPMENT.

In the early eighties consideration of a railroad from Farmington was taken up and negotiations were kept up for some time, the location of the proposed road being in doubt, but finally it was laid through Freeman and Salem to Kingfield and the first train whistled into Kingfield on Dec. 3rd, 1884. With the coming of the iron road Kingfield's prosperity was assured and the growth from this point has been rapid. Old mills were put into operation. New mills were built, new stores were opened, new residences quickly appeared. Public improvements were soon made, the population grew rapidly, and the valuation of town property increased from $119,000 in 1884, to over $336,000 in 1902. Enterprise succeeded depression. New life sprang into the town and completely transformed it. The first manufacturing plant of any size to be built after the railroad's coming was assured, was the concern now known as the Judkins & Bogert Mfg. Co. This concern has been one of the prime factors in bringing Kingfield to her present prosperity. It drew people here to labor, furnishing steady employment at fair wages. It created a demand for lumber, thereby benefitting the people of the rural districts. The influx of population built up trade of all kinds and soon the way was opened for further extension of the manufacturing interests of the community.

The Huse Spool and Bobbin Company was the next of the large manufacturing concerns to build here. This company was incorporated in 1900 and employs a large number of men and women. It also furnishes the electric lighting for the village.

In 1895 the Kingfield Savings Bank was incorporated. Its officers, at present, are: A. G. Winter, President; H. S. Wing, Treas. Its record thus far has been very gratifying and its future success seems assured. The same year the Alhambra Building Company was incorporated and has for its officers the following: E. E. Jenkins, President; O. W. Simmons, Vice Pres.; and H. S. Wing, Clerk and Treasurer. Another corporation which is of great value to the community is the Kingfield Water Company, chartered by special act of the Legislature of 1897. The system by which the water supply was taken from Tufts Pond was built in the summer of 1898. The present officers of the company are as follows: E. E. Jenkins, President; H. S. Wing, Secretary and Treasurer.

Another source of development to the town in not only the past fifteen years, but in years before, is the business enterprise of Chas. W. French and his brother, the late Sumner French. They ever labored to promote the welfare of the town and their time and money was so invested as to be a source of great help to the town, and for which it should be duly grateful.

There are many other plants giving employment to several men and all working together to benefit the proprietors and to promote the general interest of the town. Among the number are the following located on the right bank of the Carrabassett in Kingfield village: L. A. Norton, finish, flooring and moulding; H. P. Lander estate, drag and hand rakes; Ellis and Norton, axes and cant dogs; Mayo and Wilkins, wcrsted rolls and bosses; Moses Scribner, long and short lumber.

That Kingfield is a busy village in these years of her renewed life goes without saying among those who have had the pleasure of visiting the place.

One of the most noticeable features of Kingfield's mercantile side is the large number of young men engaged in trade, and working at the professions. With almost no exceptions all are young men, many under thirty years of age.

INCIDENTS AND FACTS.

Many of our people today have some knowledge of the trials, hardships and privations endured by the founders of our town, but this knowledge is fast becoming an indefinite mass, and unless some effort is made to collect and preserve these compiled names and facts that ought to be so fondly treasured will soon pass into the realms of the forgotten. Already a great deal that should be familiar to our youth, as well as to the adults of our community, is no longer obtainable, and while we regret that so few of these facts that are within our reach, we take this opportunity to make note of some of them that not all may be lost.

We, at this late day, occasionally hear from some of our older citizens something of the obstacles that confronted the pioneers and made necessary those qualities that have placed them in the ranks of nature's noblemen. While we give due respect and admiration to those people, we still view them as an element foreign to our busy lives and forget the debt we owe them. Because a century in which the world has been transformed intervenes between them and us, we are prone to think of the pioneers as far-off individuals, as strangers to the scenes we cherish today. Nay, not so. The pioneer was here. It was he who found this town a square area of forest, wielded the woodsman's axe and felled trees where our stores, mills and shops now stand. It was he who broke the soil, bridged the streams and harnessed the waters, that nature might sustain her creatures. It was he who risked famine, Indians and wild beasts, traced the footpaths, turnpiked the roads and built the cabins, formed the primitive government, established crude schools and worshipped after the manner of his day and generation. In short, it was he who took Kingfield in the rough and gave us Kingfield, the finished product of years of labor. And what were the conditions under which he labored to bring about this result? Money was hardly ever seen. Labor was in almost no demand. Six to nine dollars a month was the highest wage paid the ablest laborer. Four days' work was given for a bushel of wheat. As high as $1.00 was paid for a peck of seed corn. Caleb Stevens went from Kingfield to Waterville and gave four days' work for a bushel of corn, and brought it all the way from Waterville to his home on his shoulders. Sylvanus Allen, who lived on Shiloh Hill, went to Hallowell and gave five days' work for five pecks of corn, and brought it all the way to Kingfield on his back, and found a neighbor sick and his family in worse straits than his own. Mr. Allen heroically divided the bounty, turned upon his heel, retraced his path to Hallowell and repeated his former feat. For these men of iron will and indomitable courage it was as nothing to walk six or eight miles a day to their work and return at night, carrying two bushels of corn or wheat upon their shoulders. They were men created for the special purposes of the times in which they lived and most nobly did they perform the tasks allotted them.

There were several years about the time of the War of 1812 that crops failed, and great poverty overtook even those who considered themselves well-to-do. Ebenezer Vose, who settled on the Pratt Wood farm on the Lexington road in those times, had some experience which serves to show the nature of those early conditions. Corn, wheat and potatoes were the staple products of the times, large dependence being placed in the potato crop. One spring Mr. Vose and family were forced to dig up the potatoes already planted, cut off the seed end of the potato and replant it, reserving the other end for food.

The Chapman family were at one time in such sore straits that they were forced to subsist, for two weeks, on the saliva from poplar trees and the milk from a two-years-old heifer, not being able to obtain a morsel of bread or a single potato. Yet people tell us of hard times in these days. Can we not profit by acquainting ourselves with the pioneer and his experiences? It would so seem.

No disagreeable nor disastrous experiences with Indians are recorded in the history of Kingfield, though many Indians frequented this region in the early days. They were mostly engaged in hunting and fishing, the excellent grounds drawing them here in large numbers. The Sandy river has its source not many miles from that of the Carrabassett, and they both enter the Kennebec not many miles apart, thus forming a circuit of fishing grounds unexcelled in this region.

One instance of fear of Indians by the settlers comes to us from an older citizen. In the time of the War of 1812-15 it was generally expected that the Indians and English would descend upon Maine from Canada, and the rumor came to Kingfield that they were about to descend upon the town from the Canadian border, but a rumor only it proved to be, and soon the hamlet was restored to tranquility.

Some few facts that it is well to remember have been collected by the writer and are given herewith:

The first white male child born in Kingfield was William King Dudley, born in 1809, and the second white male child was Davis Phillips. The first white female child was Martha Phillips. The first bridge built in Kingfield was built on the site of the Norton bridge as known at present. The second was the bridge built on or near the site of the chain bridge. This was a covered bridge and was blown down in a short time after being built. The first framed house was built near the cemetery, a little northwest of Orren Tuft's residence. Paul Wing was the builder. The first church was a Union house built on the site occupied by the Universalist church at the present time. The first preachers were Howard Winslow and Nathaniel Gilbert. The first schoolhouse was erected not far from the railroad crossing on the "Freeman Road." The first lawyer was Benjamin Foster. The first traders were Charles Pike and John Welceme. The stores were located on the lots extending from Daniel Cushman's residence to the house occupied by W. S. Jacobs. The first blacksmith was Thomas Fillibrown. The second was Hull Abbott. The first tailor was Patrick McLoon. The first mill occupied the present site of the French saw mill, at Kingfield village was run by Solomon Stanley. The first harness maker was John Woodard, who removed to New Portland in the sixties. The first road turnpiked in town was the one leading to "Freeman Ridge." The first mail carrier of whom the writer has learned was Hiram Haskell who brought the mail from Farmington to Kingfield. He made one trip a week. He carried the mail on horseback, using the oldtime "saddle bags" to hold and protect it. He carried according to the times a tin horn which he sounded lustily upon his arrival at the entrance of the vilage. Upon hearing it the people stepped to the roadside as he passed along and received their mail, and considered the mail facilities excellent.

THE FAMOUS

NORTH STAR FUR COAT

*For Gentlemen
and Ladies.*

Made only in St. Paul, Minn., by the most skillful workmen in the world, and

Fully Warranted

"NORTH STAR" means Style, Fit, Wear and Satisfaction, and costs no more than inferior coats without a warrant.

We recommend "North Star" coats for the following reasons: There is no acid used in dressing the skins, therefore, they will not stiffen by wetting. The seams are sewed with a double, waxed linen thread and will not rip. And above all the skins are natural color.

Ladies can now have coats cut to fit and not be obliged to wear men's coats. Our line is complete for gentlemen and ladies in the following materials; linings and trimmings to suit:

BLACK CHINESE DOG, MARTIN, GOAT, WOMBAT, SPANISH LAMB, KANGAROO, GALLOWAY CALF, RACCOON, CURLY PUP, CUB BEAR, BRAZILIAN DOG, ETC., ETC.

Our best advertisement is a satisfied wearer of "North Star" coats.
Talk with them,—they are plenty.
